

One price, three tiers

Why Rise now prices from one number, what the rule is, and what it means for customers, resellers, distributors and the website.

01

What was wrong

Rise sells the same products through three channels: the website, resellers and distributors. Until now each channel had its own price list, and nothing tied them together. That creates four problems:

- No single anchor. When retail, reseller and distributor prices are set separately, there is nothing to stop a walk-in customer paying less than a shop buying a case, or a shop paying less than a distributor. Every price change risks putting one channel out of order with another.
- No guaranteed margin. A reseller only sells Rise if there is a clear, predictable gap between what they pay and what the customer pays. A distributor only supplies resellers if there is a gap below that. With three separate lists, those gaps were different on every product.
- Different sizes on different lists. The website and the trade sheets did not always describe the same product in the same size, so nobody could compare like with like, and Rise could not defend the numbers.
- Trade prices were public. Both rate sheets sat on the website for any customer, reseller or competitor to read, including the distributor commission. Customers could see what a shop paid, and resellers could see what distributors paid.

02

The rule

Everything now hangs off one number per product: the recommended retail price, which is also the price on risethebrand.co.za. The two trade tiers are a fixed share of it.

- Resellers pay 75% of retail. They sell at the retail price and keep 25% on every bottle.
- Distributors pay 60% of retail. They are the cheapest tier, so they can supply resellers, and they earn R25 commission on every item on top.
- Same product, same size, on every list. One size per product, everywhere. Courier is R170 per case to the door, with a Pudo option on the two small products.
- Trade prices are sent, not shown. The website only shows retail. The Trade page describes the two tiers and takes applications; approved applicants receive the rate sheet by email.

The new prices

Retail is the anchor and the two tiers are calculated from it. Multipurpose Cleaner, Footwear Cleaner and Pine Gel use the retail prices set by Rise. The remaining products have been given retail prices in the same spirit, so that every product on every list follows the one rule. Any of these can be adjusted; the tiers move with them.

PRODUCT	SIZE	RETAIL	RESELLER 75%	DISTRIBUTOR 60%
Multipurpose Cleaner	750 ml	R 100.00	R 75.00	R 60.00
Dishwashing Liquid	750 ml	R 35.00	R 26.25	R 21.00
Thick Bleach	1 L	R 35.00	R 26.25	R 21.00

04

What it means

- For a customer: one price, the same on the site and on a reseller's shelf. No reason to shop around between the two.
- For a reseller: a clean 25% margin on every product, a rate sheet that fits on one page, and no customer who can see what they paid.
- For a distributor: 40% off retail, room to supply resellers at a profit, and R25 commission per item across the whole range.
- For Rise: one calculation instead of three lists. Change a retail price and both sheets follow. Nothing to edit on the website when trade prices move.

What changed on the website

- The shop shows the new retail prices: Multipurpose Cleaner R100, Footwear Cleaner R100, Pine Gel R40, Dishwashing Liquid R35.
- The Trade page no longer shows price tables. It explains the reseller and distributor tiers and keeps the application form; the rate sheet is emailed within one working day.
- The "4 easy payments" line under each price has been removed until an instalment provider is connected.
